

Redemption Protest

A taxpayer – usually someone with legal right (such as the owner, heir, or lienholder) typically has the right to file a written protest with the Board of Equalization to challenge the assessed value of the property. The objection of value must have justifiable cause and supporting evidence to merit a value change.

The Board of Equalization has the right to review the assessed value for each year prior to the tax lien.